E. SESSION SUMMARY:

There were large rolls of black, flexible tubing reminiscent of that used for irrigation projects. I was standing in the midst of a huge fruit tree orchard; large red apples it seems. There were grinding noises, the wind whistling through the tree leaves and a flock of large black birds.

There was an emphasis on either studying or dealing with something unseen to a group of individuals. They were running around gathering different objects and bringing them back to a central location. Another group of people then took these objects and combined them somehow.

The concepts of "resistance", "organization" and "long-term planning" were associated with a written statement or theory.

Enduring Echoes of Peru's Past

DOFFING HIS MASK, a member of Los Panchitos dance troupe takes a breather from vigorous street dancing during a mid-year festival in Monsefú, a town on the northern coast of Peru. With its origins deep in the past, the dance pokes fun at figures of the present.

Coursing through the streets, the dancers enact a sort of morality play in which the wry dramas of everyday life are played out to the amusement of spectators. The finger of ridicule points to a landowner who abuses peasant workers, a judge who decides cases in favor of the rich, a priest who asks for money—indeed, some priest masks have horns.
